

NEW FRONTIERS IN SANSKRIT AND INDIC KNOWLEDGE

RE-CLAIMING PASTS AND RE-VISIONING FUTURE

2 Day Pre-Conference Workshop On

RESEARCH ON ŚĀSTRA-S IN CONTEMPORARY TIMES

Date

14-15th December, 2019

Venue

CVV Campus, Veliyanad, Ernakulam, Kerala

Objectives of the Workshop

Participants will be able to:

- Develop a research program using their own experience and reflections (appreciate themselves as a resource)
- Develop indigenous models from Indian texts and śāstra-s to explain and predict human behavior
- Develop indigenous psychological constructs from Indian texts and śāstra-s
- Employ various approaches – textual analysis, historical analysis, case method, lexical analysis, bridging life-world and scientific-world – that address current indigenous questions and issues for knowledge development in India

Context and Rationale

Indian Psychology has grown as a movement in the last two decades, and has emphasized the integration of Indian philosophy and psychology, unlike in the West, where the two disciplines have been divorced for a century. This calls for much innovation in methodology and the adoption of a multi-paradigmatic approach to research beyond logical positivism. The workshop addresses this need by presenting textual analysis, historical analysis, case method, lexical analysis, bridging life-world and scientific-world, to name a few, as methods that can serve the development of indigenous knowledge systems in India. The scholarly tradition of India will be emphasized through stories, and participants will receive hands-on experience in developing indigenous models and constructs. By learning the indigenous research methodology, it is hoped that participants will be able to launch their own research program in the future.

Who Can Attend

Scholars and researchers in Sanskrit, and Indic knowledge systems, languages, linguistics, philosophy, psychology, education and cognitive sciences.
